Abstract of the Disclosure

5

A synthetic radiation source uses a carbon nanotube material as a cold cathode for generation of x-rays. The synthetic radiation source has permits the use of solid-state detectors, improved calibration for detector current leakage, and phase locked detection. The source can be used in numerous areas, such as the detection of thickness and mass per unit area of cigarette paper.